Use your summer to begin your legal career in Asia

The Law Professional Practicum (LPP) is designed to provide Australian and international law students with an introduction to the Indonesian legal system and an opportunity to put legal theory and analysis into practice within an Indonesian context.

Indonesia's legal system is characterised by complexity and pluralism. It is the product of inherited colonial European civic and criminal codes, 70 years of post-independence legal reforms under both authoritarian and democratic regimes, and residual – and often overlapping bodies of pre-colonial Islamic law and traditional or customary law. With increasingly important commercial, trade, tourism, and security links between Australia and Indonesia, understanding the legal system of Australia's northern neighbour has never been more important.

The LPP will allow students to dip their toe into the waters of Indonesia's legal system, and to develop their professional skills, while building their networks within the Indonesian legal fraternity.

This program is overseen by an experienced legal professional with extensive knowledge of the Indonesian legal system.

The program runs from early January until mid-February each year.

What is involved?

- ◆ Indonesian language classes;
- ◆ Seminars by expert academics and practitioners within the field of Indonesian law; and
- ◆ Supervised professional placement with an Indonesian or international legal firm, government authority or non-government organisation (NGO).

What will you get out of it?

- ◆ A professional experience in Indonesian law and a chance to establish your networks in Indonesia.
- ◆ A detailed professional evaluation suitable for your CV or as a job reference; and
- ◆ Academic credit towards your university degree (by negotiation with your university).

Applications close 1 October
